Immerse yourself in Japanese history and culture, during this exploration of the temples, shrines and attractions found in the country's former capital city of Nara. Discover this historically significant capital, first established in the 18th century, as you admire its wealth of important religious sites and the one-of-a-kind deer park, nearby. The city of Nara was founded in 710, when it was designated as the country's first permanent capital. Nara, or Heijo as it was then known, was home to many of the most important Buddhist monasteries in the then-nascent Japanese empire, which made it a key center of political and religious power. As Nara's power and influence grew, the city became a threat to the government, leading the country's rulers to move the capital to Nagaoka in 784. Despite this shift in fortunes, Nara retains a wealth of important historical sites, including some of Japan's most important Buddhist temples. Stop by Nara's Todaiji Temple to start your trip. This magnificent edifice, constructed in the 8th century, is among the country's most important religious buildings. Explore the temple's Daibutsuden (Great Buddha Hall), one of the largest wooden buildings in the world (awesome), along with its immense bronze Buddha statue, which are just some of the treasures to be found in this incredible attraction. Continue your Nara trip with a visit to its famous deer park, a unique 1,250-acre preserve where more than 1,000 tame deer freely roam. Admire these gentle creatures as they graze and wander the park, and stop to purchase special deer food, which the animals will gladly eat from your hand, if you wish.
